California. The State of California has been said to be made up of a series of wonders! To a great extent this may be said to be true. The Southern portion of California for a long time has been a kind of terra incognita, and a fruitful locality for suggestion and inspiration - a treasury for news-writers and story-tellers. The telegraph, postal facilities, steamships and railroads, have done away with the field of fiction, and left the book-maker and letter-correspondent to the limits of facts and the reasonable deductions therefrom. Not until very recently does it appear that this part of the State has attracted more than a mere casual observation or remark in the Eastern States. And it is every day apparent, from the communications received, that no practical and local information has been disseminated specially in reference to the five last counties constituting the extreme Southern part of California. When the pears and grapes were placed on exhibition in 1871, in several of the Atlantic State Fairs, they were matters of astonishment, and it was not easy to convince the people that the grapes were not really grown under glass. Last Saturday [October 10th, 1872, says the Stars and Stripes, a California newspaper, ] we gathered from a single grape-branch...
