CHAPTER XXIII The Chief Surgical Nurse The chief surgical nurse occupies a position of responsibility second only to the superintendent. On her keenness, her organizing ability, her conscientiousness in details will depend, to a great extent, not only the reputation of the hospital, not only good results in surgery, but the lives of many of its patients. In addition to the qualifications needed for successful head nursing in general, she needs to be thoroughly abreast of the times in regard to her own branch of nursing. Organization. --In undertaking her work, a comprehensive system of procedure, thoroughly understood by pupil nurses, will greatly facilitate the daily routine and save much time. To every man his work is a necessary rule, care being taken that each detail of an operation has been anticipated and definitely assigned. In most hospitals with an active surgical service the...
