

A Path, So Far (Paperback)

By Ronald Lewis

Xulon Press, United States, 2011. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Burton Rodebound, having highly rated innate aptitudes, not political skills, experiences inertia in Corporate. He opts for the inspirational life of the nomadic entrepreneur, to use his IQ, while helping people. He heads an art/humanities agency that appears to use his title to claim funding, but not his skills. Using his Education Minor for designing courses for a local college, the Dean disapproves the proposal. Work as a consultant to NY City and California design firms end due to late commission payments. His furniture design enthalls, but he cannot compete with market prices. All the United States except three experience his visits as stock photographer, providing metaphorical imagery for commercial use. Most income over time came from historical restoration contracting, coordinating with photography, while on the road, living in the back of his van, on state campgrounds, and in porous boat houses. Identical living quarters applied when he opened his own art gallery, but during recession, and twelve artists suffer. Burt avoids conflicts with brown bears, pumas, cougars, and wild owls while in nature, plus an escaped convict. Cautioned by neighbors, he...
