All of a preachers duties have reference primarily to Deity, since whatsoever he does must be done in the name of Uhrist. Nevertheless he is under direct obligation to God irrespective of his service to himself and his fellow-men. Piety should be cultivated, even though there were not another being in existence than self and God. SECTION I. Reverence. it seems a strange thing to say that a preachers office tends to promote irreverence. If he is not exceedingly devout he will find that familiarity with sacred things breeds carelessness. The true preacher should never lose that feeling of awe so eloquently described by Chrysostom on The Priesthood. 1. There Should be Reverence in Private Life. --His family worship should not be perfunctory service, but heart felt devotion. The preacher who fails to impress his own household with...
