G., In London and at Tewin Water, Welwyn At the time when the art of the colour-printers was at its best in Japan, their productions were hardly known in the West. The first record we appear to have of them is in a list of the possessions of Isaac Titsingh, who for fourteen years was chief of the Dutch settlement at Nagasaki, and died in 1812. Other examples were no doubt brought into Europe by the Dutch; but it was only in the last three or four decades of the nineteenth century that an influence began to make itself felt in the paintings of the West, far more effectively than had been exercised for two centuries by the more than superficial effects of the influx of Japanese porcelain. This influence was largely stimulated by the interest shown in Japanese colour-prints by the De Goncourt brothers and their friends in Paris, and by Rossetti, Whistler, and a few other painters of note.
