This brief and concise handbook will explore the subject matter of Philosophy of Religion. The philosopher of religion asks why. The philosopher seeks understanding about peoples beliefs. Traditionally, Philosophy of Religion is that branch of philosophy that attempts to examine religious beliefs or religious presuppositions. Philosophers of religion may ask this question: Is a belief in God rational Can this belief be justified by reason The focal point of this investigation of the Philosophy of Religion is an examination of a rational defense for Theism (belief in God). This concise handbook was designed for the purpose of explaining some of the classic arguments as proofs for the existence of God. More specifically, the relationship between Faith and Reason will be examined. As a Christian, we need to know: What role does reason have in regard to our religious faith Should we believe in something if it cant be verified by science Rationalism is an overemphasis on scientific proof for Gods existence; however, we simply cant put God under a microscope since God is invisible, He is a Spirit. How, then, can we rationally defend our faith or belief in a being who we cant see with the naked eye More specifically, If there is a God, as we believers claim that there is, Why is there so much pain and suffering in the world in which we live Did God create evil The question of evil has caused many people to disregard any belief in God at all. The Philosopher of Religion must take to task the problem of evil. Can we really prove the existence of God by argument What do the Ontological, Cosmological, and Teleological Arguments have to...
