A large hypertrophied left ventricle, without valvular disease to account for it, a hard pulse and characteristic sphygmographic tracing (see fig. 9), or an atheromatous condition of the arterial walls, are strongly suggestive of chronic kidney disease, more especially cirrhosis. 3. The exact diameter of the ophthalmoscopic changes. -- In the great majority of cases of intracranial tumour, the retinal change is a papillitis, of greater or less severity; and in the great majority of cases of renal disease the changes in the fundus oculi are those described under the term albuminuric retinitis. (See fig. 10). But in some cases of tumour the retinal changes resemble, more or less closely, those of Brights disease, white spots or streaks being present in the neighbourhood of the macula; and vice versa, in some cases of Brights disease, the white patches are absent and the retinal change is essentially a papillitis. Again, the appearance in the fundus (both in tumour and Brights disease) may be suggestive of either, but characteristic of neither affection. To sum up, in most cases it is easy to decide, by means of the ophthalmoscope, whether the P10. 10. --Fundus oculi in a case white patches are seen in the retina, of the macula. retinal changes are characteristic of cerebral tumour or of kidney disease; but in some cases this is difficult or impossible. The ophthalmoscopic appearances per se, can never be taken as an absolutely certain guide, for the appearances typical ct...
