A forcible illustration of the theory of exorcism is seen amongst the Moslem Arabs. Directly a traveller has arrived at Wady Muna, the Arabs, after pitching the tents, hasten to the ceremony of throwing stones at the Devil. This custom originated in a legend, that when Abraham arrived at Wada Muna, the Devil obstructed his passage at the entrance to the valley. St. Gabriel advised him to stone the Evil One. Abraham accordingly pelted him seven times, and drove him from his path. Again the obstruction occurred in the middle and the western extremity of the valley, but was each time driven off with stones. Over these spots three pillars have been erected, and the Arabs, gathering successively around them, cast seven stones apiece at each pillar, exclaiming, In the name of God; God is great. We do this to secure ourselves from the Devil and his troops. The stones once thrown against the pillars are not supposed to be used again. In the early Irish Church the recital of a saint's hymn was considered a Luirech, or defence against the assaults of the Devil. The most celebrated was the Hymn of St. Patrick, known as The Deer's Cry. Of this hymn it is said: It is a religious armour to protect the body and soul against demons, and men, and vices. Every person who sings it every day, with all his attention on God, shall not have demons appearing...
