The whole is like the movement of thoughts that contain the images and explanations of some great event in the historic process of the world. Raphael is serene and glorious; Mephistopheles stoops like one who is bent above a great and serious toil; a glow of enlightenment shines in the eyes of Faust. In a few moments the transfiguration is over, and the scene is as it was before. MEPHISTOPHELES Are you convinced at last? FAUST Convinced? MEPHISTOPHELES Nay, my dear professor, your slowness of apprehension this morning makes the task which I have set for myself strangely difficult and prolonged. We may, perhaps, leave this show, which I had conjured up for you, until another and more favorable opportunity. RAPHAEL Look; yonder at the mountain's base. MEPHISTOPHELES Well, then, be it so; you shall bring on the consummation, which I had supposed still to be delayed; probably, the time is riper than I deemed, and the final clearing up of our good friend's difficulties is at hand. RAPHAEL Your efforts are deserving of the success of which somehow they persistently fail; your courage continues unabated, although you find yourself so often, and in such strange ways, -baffled in your attempts; we may as well proceed. MEPHISTOPHELES It shall be as you wish. FAUST Courtesy becomes you admirably. MEPHISTOPHELES Nay, no further raillery; look downward; the mists have vanished, and the road...
