Forgotten Books, 2018. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Travels in Iceland: Performed by Order of His Danish Majesty; Containing Observation on the Manners and Customs of the Inhabitants, a Description of the Lakes, Rivers, Glaciers, Hot-Springs, and Volcanoes; Of the Various Kinds of Earths, Stones, Fossils, and Petrifications On Sundays they have a few dishes extraordinary; such as gruel made from barley or buck-wheat boiled in milk, or porridge, composed of milk and flour. Fat soup, meat stewed in skim milk, and eaten with different sauces to which may be added a variety of other ragouts, customary in the country. On the grand festivals of Christmas and Easter, they would think themselves lost, if they did not all have smoked meat, which they dress on the preceding evening. The peasant is not much in the habit of salting his meat, but prefers pressing it, to expel the superfluous Juice he then leaves it for a couple of days, that the remainder of the Juice may dry up, and afterwards hangs it in the chimney, eight or ten feet above the hearth. Some travellers have asserted, that meat prepared in this way is liable to spoil, but they are mistaken it on the contrary keeps better than that which is smoked in other northern countries, and which is known by the name of Hamburg beef. At Christmas each family kills a fat sheep, which is eaten with a sauce composed of milk gruel. The peasant never roasts his meat, but always eats it with this kind of broth, when inclined to regale himself. Besides the above-mentioned festivals, there are other days devoted to feasting. After the harvest they consume in each family what is called the fat lamb,...
