Richard Beauchamp, archdeacon of Suffolk, held the see for two years, 1448-1450, and was translated to Salisbury. His successor, Reginald Buller, or Bowlers, abbat of St. Peters, Gloucester, held the see for two years and three months, and was translated to Lichfield 1450-1453, but was buried in Hereford Cathedral. The next bishop, John Stanberry, or Stamberv, 1453-1474, was a native of Devonshire, or perhaps of Morwenstow, in Cornwall, for it was there that he was baptised. He was a Carmelite friar at Oxford, and bore so high a character for ability and learning that he was chosen by King Henry VI. to be his own confessor and the first Provost of Eton. The king intended to give him the bishopric of Norwich, but was persuaded by the Earl of Suffolk to give this to his chaplain, and...
