In the 12th annual report of William Farr, Esq. , to the Registrar General of England, we are told it may be broadly stated that 27 in 1000 men of the population of the age of 20 and under 60, are suffering from one kind of disease or another; that several are of long duration, that others are recurrent, and that some are hereditary. We are informed in a subsequent report of the Registrar himself, that it seems to be a law one person out of every 45, living at the commencement of any year, will die within that year. (The entire system of insurance--life, fire, and marine--is erected on the principle contended for in this chapter. Not only do a certain relative number of men die in each class annually, but the law extends to the number of policies lapsed each year. There seems also to be a periodicity in the number of fires and marine disasters.) According to Porter and Buckle, even marriage is not determined by the temper and wishes of the individual, but by large general facts over which individuals can exercise no authority. It is now known that marriages bear a fixed and definite relation to the price of corn. A century's experience in England demonstrates that marriages are regulated by the average earnings of the great mass of people. Cheapness of provision and not love regulates...
