Excerpt from Edinburgh Medical Journal, Vol. 34: Combining the Monthly Journal of Medicine and the Edinburgh Medical and Surgical Journal; Part II., January to June 1889 I am unable to assign a definite reason why these bacilli be come engrafted upon a case of chronic laryngitis, or lay hold of the larynges of certain subjects of pulmonary tubercle-bacillary disease and not of others. I do not believe that they come from the pulmonary expectoration in transit, for I have never yet been able to detect them in the secretion of the non-tubercular larynx in cases of pulmonary tubercle-bacillary disease. If in such cases one could find them in the secretion of the larynx before structural evidences of their presence were visible, one might assume that they were derived from the pulmonary expectoration. But such is not the case. Whilst tubercle-bacilli, as already stated, may persist in the expectoration of certain subjects of tubercle-bacillary disease for years with little, or slight apparent results upon the general economy, and without inducing pyrexia or appreciable progressive local changes, still, in view of the fact that they are now considered by most competent authorities the essential factor in the production of tubercular disease, the most important indications of treatment is to get rid of them. How is this to be accomplished? My paper this evening is a short summary of many therapeutic observations made in this direction. It may be assumed that there are three principal methods by which we may endeavour to influence the bacillus of tubercle, namely, by climate, by general, or by local remedies. Combinations of these may, of course, also be essayed. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands...
