Excerpt: . . . preferences also presents challenges because relevant data are just now becoming available. In 2002, we recommended that Education sponsor research into key aspects of effectiveness of title IV programs, that Education and the Department of the Treasury collaborate on such research into the relative effectiveness of title IV programs and tax preferences, and that the Secretaries of Education and Treasury collaborate in studying the 17 combined effects of tax preferences and title IV aid. In April 2006, Educations Institute for Education Sciences (IES) issued a Request for Applications to conduct research on, among other things, evaluating the efficacy of programs, practices, or policies that are intended to improve access to, persistence in, or completion of postsecondary education. Multiyear projects funded under this subtopic are expected to begin in July 2007. As we noted in our 2002 report, research into the effectiveness of different 18 forms of postsecondary education assistance is important. Without such information federal policymakers cannot make fact-based decisions about how to build on successful programs and make...
